

THE NEW YORK HERALD.

WHOLE NO. 9435.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, JULY 11, 1862.

PRICE TWO CENTS.

M'CLELLAN'S ARMY.

The Reception of the President in Camp.

PLENDID MILITARY REVIEW BY MOONLIGHT.

onest "Old Abe" Spends a Night Among the Troops.

he Well Fought Battles to be Inscribed on the Regimental Colors.

ADDITIONAL NAMES OF KILLED AND WOUNDED

Killed.....

Wounded.....

Missing.....

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1862.
No intelligence has been received from the Army of the Potomac for several days past, further than that it is improving in strength and efficiency.

The Naugatuck left this morning for New York.

Our Army Correspondence.

HARRISON'S LANDING, July 7, 1862.
A Advantage of the Change of the Base of Operations—The Troops Well-Supplied—They Are Again Ready to Fight—Lieutenant Colonel Childs of Michigan—Colonel Stryker—General G. T. Jones—Music Hath Charms, &c.

Everything is going on swimmingly since the change of our base of operations. Shiploads of supplies come to our wharf, and there is abundance of fresh meat, so that the troops now are well and abundantly fed for the present. And our brave boys feed in need of the change. For a week many suffered greatly from inadequacy of the rations, dash out, only to be given boxes of hard crackers being given out to a company, and these only serving as a week's supply. The agencies of the recent march and battle were the impulsive cause. I have not heard a murmur uttered concerning.

Our troops, now that they have had two or three days' rest, feel all ready to resume fighting at a moment's notice. They have tested the mettle of the enemy, and are no fear of the foe. It will be more gratifying enough, to renew the contest with a nearer equality of troops than in the recent engagements. All continue to look forward to the recent battles, and each day reveals its new hero. The men feel perfectly satisfied with the result.

The west of hard fighting, and there is nothing like it goes so much to show that the late arch and battle were victories. The Fourth of July celebration of Gen. McClellan, which was read to every gun of the army, has had a thrilling effect. I do not say any advantage of any gun ever had such an effect on his men as this. The troops have soon after group listen to its reading, while the words are rung with their repeated cheer.

The old Harrison mansion is still used as a hospital. The men are recovering well, and the medical service seems in taking care of the sick and wounded. An arse as practicable, the sick are removed to Fort Monroe and the Northern cities. Among our regiments Monroe is Lieutenant Col. Childs, the Fifth Michigan, &c. He is sick.

He is in command of all the men raised under his command. Some disease has taken him, and the Commanding General has sent him to his regiment.

Each day increases the encumbrance passed upon Gen. McClellan's mind by the weight of the Malvern Hill disaster, to his general management of the military. He is to be seen while the enemy every part."

A new order allows the ban to play. The effect of order is vastly gratifying, and particularly on the day of the month. Many are now enjoying. We are glad to hear that the band is to be present for the past death.

"All is well with us," says the band, "and we have a week of health before us. But we are anxious in all the time and moment at every post of danger. When Col. Boddy is assumed command of the regiment, the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated. The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute, the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.

The cheering here of the past two or three days has inspired any laborious efforts in the day of duty not only to the stimulated but to the stimulated.

The mornings and evenings, however, are quite comfortable, and may be spared.

The unexpected visit of President Lincoln to this army must have been received with great interest, and to be satisfied that the Army of the Potomac was a strong institution and destined to enter in triumph over the rebels, and that before a very long period.

The thunder of the guns, and the roar of a salute,

the long lines of soldiers, and the gunners of the officers, all made up a scene, silvered by the rays of Diana, the Goddess of Night, long to be remembered.